the orthodox view of ancient mediterranean slavery holds that greece and rome were the only genuine slave societies of the ancient world that is societies in which slave labour contributed significantly to the economy and underpinned the wealth of elites other societies labelled societies with slaves have been thought to have made little use of slave labour and therefore have been largely ignored in recent scholarship this volume presents a radically different view of the ancient world of the eastern mediterranean portraying it as a patchwork of regional slave systems although slavery was indeed particularly highly developed in greece and rome it was also entrenched in carthage and other parts of the eastern mediterranean and played a not insignificant role in the affairs of elites in assyria babylonia and persia in greece diversity was the rule from the early archaic period onwards differing historical trajectories in various regions shaped the institution of slavery in manifold ways producing very different slave systems in regions such as sparta crete and attica however in the wider eastern mediterranean world we find a similar level of diversity slavery was exploited to differing degrees across all of these regions and was the outcome of a complex interplay between cultural economic political geographic and demographic variables in seeking to contextualize slaving practices across the greek world through detailed soundings of the slaving practices of the israelites assyrians babylonians persians and carthaginians this volume not only provides new insights into these ancient cultures but also allows for a nuanced exploration of the economic underpinnings of greek elite culture that sets its reliance on slavery within a broader context and sheds light on the complex circumstances from which it emerged
